Georges Seurat (1859-1891)

- French neo-impressionist painter who studied art as science. He was a very private man.
- Made the technique called pointillism which uses small dots of contrasting color to create his art.
- Spent his life studying color theories and the effects of different linear structures.
- Born in Paris, studied at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts. Was influenced by Rembrandt and Goya.
- He created over 500 drawings, including 7 large paintings, and 60 smaller ones.

A Sunday on La Grande Jatte

Edward Hopper (1882-1967)

- American painter who used bright colors to depict ordinary scenes from everyday life.
- His paintings were done in a manner to create a somber, melancholy mood.
- His work had a “snapshot” like quality to them. Appearing more like a photograph than a painting.
- He was born, raised, and studied in New York. Traveled to Europe three times but lived in New York.
- Mostly focused on advertising and illustrative etchings until 1924 when took up painting full time.

Nighthawks

Marc Chagall (1887-1985)

- Russian born artist who painted everyday objects looking like they were floating in the scene, as if defying the laws of gravity.
- Borrowed elements from cubism, impressionism, and fauvism yet developed a style that can not be classified with any movement of his time.
- Studied in St. Petersburg and Paris. Returned to Russia in 1914, but left in 1922 as his works had fallen into disfavor with the Soviet Establishment.
- America Windows was created to celebrate the U.S. Bicentennial to show his thanks to the U.S. where he had come for safety during World War II.

America Windows

Paul Gauguin (1848-1903)

- French post-impressionist painter who liked to paint men and women in their natural, primitive, environment.
- Did a majority of his work living in Tahiti and islands in the southern Pacific Ocean.
- He sailed around the world for 7 years on freighters and warships. Worked for a stock-broking firm in Paris. Began painting after working in business.
- Collected works of many famous painters and studied with Picasso.

Ancestors of Tehamana

Edgar Degas (1834-1917)

- French impressionist known for paintings of the human form in motion. Many feature female ballet dancers and bathers.
- He found new and brilliant solutions to the problems of form, composition, and color.
- He favored pastels.
- Born, raised, and studied in Paris at the Ecole Des Beaux-Arts, then traveled to Italy to study.
- Early works were historical paintings of classical subjects, then later contemporary city life scenes, then artist Eduoard Manet introduced him to Impressionism.
- He preferred indoor scenes over landscapes and preferred lighter scenes with firm lines.

The Star

Claude Monet (1840-1926)

- French, Paris born artist and leader of the 19th century impressionist art movement.
- He liked to painted outdoor scenes, trying to capture the changing effects of light.
- Spent many years struggling as an artist financially and didn't begin to enjoy financial success until 1886 as the market for his works grew in the U.S.
- Instead of mixing colors on his palette, he applied separate strokes of pure, unmixed color directly to the canvas.
- Critics often remarked his work looked “unfinished” due to this free style.

Water Lilies

Vincent Van Gogh (1853-1890)

- Dutch post-impressionist painter who produced more than 1500 paintings and drawings during his life.
- Sadly he only sold ONE painting during his lifetime. It was not until after his death he became known as one of the world's greatest painters.
- Studied drawing in Brussels and used oil paints as his medium.
- Was a very solitary man who struggled with poverty and mental illness.
- It was after a quarrel with Paul Gauguin that he cut off his left ear.

The Project – Drawing your own Welcome Structure

- Flanking the entrance to the Art Institute of Chicago, Edward Kemeys' lions are among the city's most beloved and recognizable sculptures.
- Kemeys said that the lions were "conceived as guarding the building."
- You'll notice that the lions are not identical and thus are named for their poses:
 - The south lion "stands in an attitude of defiance,"
 - While the north lion is "on the prowl."
- If you could create a sculpture that would welcome people to your house.....
 - What would it look like?
 - What would you name it?
- Draw a picture of your sculpture
- We will ask for volunteers to share their art with the class
